

Street Filming

Whilst there is no law preventing anyone filming on public streets, it is an offence to cause an obstruction or to place materials on the highway without appropriate permission.

The Bristol Film Office permit process ensures relevant liaison with the police and highways are made on your behalf and confirms there is nothing planned which could disrupt the shoot. You will be issued an email detailing which streets are covered.

You should be aware that some areas that seem like public streets are actually privately owned or managed. There are a number of other agencies that look after some of Bristol's public areas such as Millennium Square, Cabot Circus and Broadmead. There are also some residential streets which are privately managed such as the Royal York Crescent in Clifton. You will need permission to film in any of these locations and you will usually be charged a fee.

Please contact Bristol Film Office for further advice and up-to-date contacts.
